Data-driven insights, content diagnostics, and actionable recommendations to retain global viewers

- Invest in 60–90 min comedies in Latin America (low vol, high engagement).
- Expand anime series in US, UK, and Korea.
- Limit thrillers > 120 mins in India due to drop-off risk.

Strategic Action Summary

- ✅ Expand 60–90 min comedies in Latin America (e.g., Argentina, Brazil, Mexico): These regions show limited volume but above-average engagement, especially in the Comedy genre. A focused ramp-up could capture growing binge behavior.
- ⚠️ Reduce >2hr thrillers and documentaries in India and Australia: Your drop-off hotspot bar shows high volume in 121–240 mins and underperformance in Documentary and Crime Thriller for these countries.

Hooked or Dropped: What Netflix Can Learn from Its Own Content Data

N

Project Objective

Netflix seeks to identify underperforming content zones and uncover strategic expansion opportunities across genres, durations, and global regions — using historical content metadata and viewer behavior proxies.

Key Insights

High Drop-Off Risk:

- 29% of Netflix’s catalog is concentrated in long-form content (121–240 mins) and one-season shows — both prone to early disengagement.
- Genres like Documentary, Horror, and Crime Thriller show disproportionately low engagement in countries like India, Poland, Austria.

Business Impact Estimation (If Strategic Recommendations Are Adopted)

Content Shift Impact:

+15% to 18% improvement in average viewer completion rates.

Viewer Hours Retained:

4. Strategic Recommendations

Prioritize:

- Shorter comedies in Latin America (e.g., Brazil, Mexico).
- Anime expansion in high-retention markets (US, UK, South Korea).
- Family & Kids content in Southeast Asia (Philippines, Thailand).

Conclusion

Netflix can reclaim engagement, reduce content bloat, and boost retention by:

- Decreasing investment in high-drop segments
- Rebalancing toward binge-worthy zones
